

The FCC should not implement any proposal that would lessen Indiana's Telephone Privacy law protections.

Also, I used to receive about 6 calls a day, usually around dinner time. Now, when the phone rings, I can be confident that it is a friend or relative contacting me, and not someone trying to sell me something, whether I have done business with them in the past or not.

If they want to try and sell something, let them use e-mail, it's less intrusive, and I can view in my own time, not at someone else's choosing.
